Belize
By the treaty of 1783 between Spain and England, the boundaries of the British settlements at Belize were the Rio Hondo on the north and the river Belize (or Wallis) on the south.
By subsequent treaty of 1786 between the same powers the southern boundary was extended to the river Jabon, or Sibun.
The territory embraced within these limits, is claimed by Guatemala to be within that state, by Mexico & England to be in Yucatan a province of Mexico.
Since 1786 the British have extended their settlements southwardly on the coast to the river Sarstoon, this extension being clearly within Guatemala.
Mosquito Coast
The council at Jamaica in 1774, claimed for the Mosquitos the entire coast from Cape Honduros (in the state of Honduros) on the north, to the northern branch of the channel of San Juan de Nicaragua, about 130 leagues.
Lord Palmerston in his note to Mr Castellon, the minister of New Granada, of the 1st May 1848 says, "The King of Mosquito might claim to the Escudo de Veragua, thus embracing the whole Atlantic Coast of Costa Rica."
Executive doc 1 Sess 31 Cong, 1849 50. Doc No 75 Vol 10 pp 29 & 118 "and the British government assert a claim for the Mosquitos to the "distantmountains" presumed the Cordilleras and in Nicaragua to the lake of that name.
